AUGUST 13, 2023 + NINETEENTH SUNDAY IN ORDINARY TIME

Jesus, the Teacher and Student

A Note From Fr. Ryan

For many families, school starts this week. Along with this beginning comes excitement and anxious wonder that fills houses and halls and classrooms. I think the beauty of this back-to-school mentality can be seen in our south stained-glass windows. They reveal Jesus' life as student and teacher.

Jesus shows himself to us as student when he is seen growing and learning in the home of the Holy Family in the School of Nazareth. The Church teaches that parents are the primary educators, notably in matters regarding the faith. The obedience a child gives to his/her parents is based in receiving more than just factual or skill-based lessons. Parents are watched and imitated. Jesus learned from his earthly parents just as much as he learned from God the Father. Watch your behaviors, students pick them up.

On the other side, Jesus, as God made flesh, was sent to show us how we are to live— he was sent as a teacher. The first indication of this comes when Mary and Joseph find him in the temple. Imagine Jesus, a young boy, deftly speaking and teaching about the love and mercy of God in the Old Testament. Children have much to teach adults, especially about the wonder and awe of the world in which they have been placed. Let us learn from them.

These little children are the focus of Jesus' teaching ministry. He tells us to embrace childlike innocence, and dependence, to receive the revelation of God. Children are resilient and creative, but this resilience is based in stable relationships with parents, caregivers, or other responsible adults. Jesus shows the disciples that the foundation of our existence and faith is in humility to receive and to give, and in giving a safe place for these to occur in.

Those who planned the layout of the windows did so with intention, knowing that school is a core element of community. Come sit and learn from them. Come and sit with Jesus. Come and learn from him. Let's keep our prayers up for all students, teachers, and administrators and their staff as this new school year begins.
